

Keep your instruments with you

You probably already know that Health & Safety regulations now preclude the siting and use of autoclaves within the corner of a surgery or consulting room. They must either be housed in a dedicated clean room – and there is often no space for such an area within an already cramped surgery environment – or you must send your instruments off to a central sterilising unit.

What you might not be aware of, however, is that these regulations do allow the continued use of disinfection machines and dishwashers for products which don't have to be sterile.

The instruments in the Propulse range fall into this category.

This means that you can keep the instruments that you use all the time within your surgery. There's no inconvenience of packing them up and sending them away, and absolutely no danger of them getting lost.
